

You know the threat is looming.

What will you do to preserve liberty?

The Leadership Program of the Rockies (LPR) trains emerging leaders in America's founding principles—why they were important in the beginning, and how they apply to the challenges of today. Then it teaches and fine-tunes the leadership skills necessary to impact public policy.

LPR graduates choose liberty. They become a force for the timeless principles we cherish. In fact, LPR Alumni have become local and national elected officials, top state leaders, federal judges, presidential cabinet members, and prominent movers in the arenas of political process, policy change, business and education.

The LPR experience is more than a one-time seminar or conference. Comprising nine full-day sessions and multiple events throughout the year, the organization is designed to have nothing less than an enduring impact on the knowledge and capabilities of its graduates -- and, fundamentally, on the preservation of the American idea.

Classes are limited to sixty-five high-caliber students, and led by an elite team of local leaders and nationally recognized experts. The result is the knowledge, tools and skills to preserve liberty.

Our country is racing mindlessly toward the dead end of socialism and it reflects a lack of understanding by our political class of basic free market economic principles. Free enterprise is the best -- and only -- path to prosperity and the Leadership Program of the Rockies teaches that truism to our future leaders. We need this boot camp for the political class now more than ever, and not just in Colorado -- but in every state in the union.

Steve Moore, The Wall Street Journal

LPR combines practical leadership skills training with our nation's timeless principles. Our nation would be transformed if more leaders had this training.

Michelle Malkin, Conservative Syndicated Columnist

I wish more Americans understood the threats we face today from abroad. Fortunately, the LPR is doing essential training for conservative leaders that will help them grasp the gravity of our nation's national security challenges. I highly recommend this program.

Peter Brookes, The Heritage Foundation
